of four divisions, which took the field in August, has swelled into a great army, which is increasing steadily in tumbers and can look back on a record of hard fighting, such as British troops have seldom sustained in the past. The struggle in the last four months has passed through three distinct phases and has now entered the fourth. The first was represented by the great out-flanking advance of the Germans and the retirement of the allies; the second, by our advance to the Aisne; the third by the gradual extension northwards of both sides to the North Sea, followed by desperate attacks by the enemy on the northern portion of the allied line. During all that time neither side has obtained a decisive victory. Each was strivial and decisive victory of the Catholic University:
